Chiropractic's time and place.

There is a time and place for everything. An appropriate professional to perform a particular job or task.

You call a plumber when you have a plumbing issue, a tow-truck company if your vehicle breaks down or an HVAC technician if your air conditioner stops working. If your vision is blurry you see the optometrist, if your tooth aches you visit the dentist and if your back is hurting your chiropractor will adjust you.

For prevention, you visit your optometrist to ensure eye health and your dentist to maintain the health of your teeth and gums. Your chiropractor is there to maintain your spinal health in conjunction with your massage therapist who deals with your muscles.

Every profession has a unique set of skills and abilities tailored to allow them to serve the public within their niche.

We rely on health care services to be there when we need them – if you are injured in an accident, paramedics are there to rescue you, start emergent care and get you to the hospital, the doctors in the hospital are there to save your life and then there is the long road to recovery. Your recovery team will consist of physiotherapists, occupational therapists, chiropractors and massage therapists along with other experts. Your chiropractor is an integral part of this picture to help you heal to your pre-accident condition and abilities.

In our office we see many motor vehicle accident patients, along with patients recovering from strokes, broken bones and hip, knee or shoulder replacement surgeries. Working in conjunction with the physiotherapists, massage therapists and low level laser therapists we each fulfill our portion in your healing process – each having a specific skills set to deal with the body in the way we were trained. No one profession can encompass all aspects of your healing process. No one professional knows all the answers. But, working together can provide the greatest care for you as a patient. Each profession looks at the body in a different way, evaluating and treating slightly different. Having multiple professions looking after you ensures all aspects of your healing progression are taken into account.

Chiropractors evaluate the spine and the nervous system assessing for interference – looking for areas where the brain and the body are not communicating properly. These areas often correspond to areas of pain, discomfort and injury.

If you are involved in a motor vehicle accident, are recovering from an injury or from a joint replacement surgery, we would be happy to become another step in your recovery process. Give us a call, we are ready to help you get back to life!
